Educational Technology and Related Education Conferences for July – December 2009

Prepared by Clayton R. Wright, cwr77@gmail.com, June 2009

This list of selected events focuses primarily on the use of technology in educational settings and on teaching and learning. Only listings from July to December 2009 are complete as dates, locations, or URLs are not available for a number of events after December 2009.

The list of events is published in a Word format to enable people with limited or high-cost Internet access to find a conference that may match their interests or obtain conference proceedings. (If you are seeking a more interactive listing, refer to online conference sites.) Consider using the “Find” tool under Microsoft Word’s “Edit” tab or similar tab in OpenOffice to locate the name of a particular conference, association, city, or country. Then, “cut and paste” a list of suitable events for yourself and your colleagues.

Please note that events, dates, titles, and locations may change; thus, check the specific conference website. Note also that some events will be cancelled at a later date (especially during this economic downturn). All the information below was obtained from Internet sources and announcements in educational journals. All Internet addresses were verified at the time of publication. No liability is assumed for any errors that may have been introduced inadvertently during the assembly of this conference list. If possible, please do not remove the contact information when you re-distribute the list as that is how I receive updates and corrections.

If you are planning or organizing a conference, the following suggestions may help you advertise your conference on the World Wide Web.

Publicity Schedule
• Announce the conference theme, date, and location at least eight months before the event. Potential participants require time to plan for a conference and often must obtain permission and funding to attend. People who schedule family vacations around a conference need to make appropriate arrangements.

Website Design
• Place the most important information – the conference title, date, and location – on the first page, preferably in the top half of the page.
• If your conference website will include Flash animation or video clips, make this page or video window optional so readers with narrow-bandwidth Internet connections can download the most pertinent information quickly.
• If the conference website changes every year or the conference is sponsored by a different institution or organization every year, add a link to the next conference to the website for the current conference. This should be done as soon as the date and location of the next conference are known. However, the ideal practice would be to keep the same website regardless of where the conference is held or just change the year of the conference in the URL, e.g., www.design.com/09> and <www.design.com/10>.

Website Content
• Write out the name of the conference. Titles such as ABC’09, EACI 2010, or ASCD can have various meanings. Why keep your organization’s name a secret?
• Specify the exact location of the conference. Most people are familiar with major cities such as Beijing, New York, or Rome, but few know the location of college or university towns or seaside resorts. Identify the closest major city; the province, state, or canton; and the country in which the event will be held. The Internet is an international meeting place, and people who do not live in your community may be interested in the conference.
• When possible, include a schedule of major conference events, including pre- or post-conference sessions or workshops. Attendees need this information so they can make travel plans and spend their time and funds judiciously. Often the only events held on the first day of a conference are the welcoming session and keynote address.
• If your conference occurs every year or every two years, say so.
• In addition to a postal address and telephone number, provide the e-mail address of a conference organizer who will check for messages frequently and respond to queries from potential participants.
